

STUART HIGHWAY BUILDING SUPPLIES - FICTIONAL EMPLOYER

Personnel file: INVALID-SHBS-CJB; extract released with candidate authority.

Date: 19 June 2019.

To: Callum James Byrne, stores assistant; payroll name update pending.

From: Gareth Venn, yard supervisor.

Subject: written warning - conduct in delivery yard on 17 June 2019

Callum,

This is a written warning about the argument with another stores employee in the delivery yard at approximately 14:10 on Monday. You were asked about a pallet placed in Bay 3 instead of Bay 5. You raised your voice, talked over the other employee and continued after I told both of you to stop. You then threw the dispatch clipboard towards the ground beside the pallet stack.

The 2019 yard altercation involved shouting and a thrown clipboard, with no reported injury.

The clipboard landed clear of the other employee. There was no contact between you and him. That does not make the act acceptable. Other staff working nearby did not know whether the argument would continue or whether another object would be thrown. Work in a yard with vehicle movements requires instructions to be given without intimidating colleagues.

You are required to follow the supervisor's directions, discuss dispatch disagreements away from active loading lanes and keep hands and objects out of an argument. A repeated incident may lead to further disciplinary action. You are to attend a toolbox discussion on communication and incident reporting on Friday before the shift starts.

The pallet location will be dealt with separately through the dispatch check. This warning is about conduct, not a finding that you were solely responsible for the original bay error. Your explanation that the other employee spoke sharply has been noted. It does not excuse throwing the clipboard.

Please sign the acknowledgment below. Signing confirms receipt, not agreement with every description. You may provide a written response for the personnel file. Employee response received: 'I accept I threw it. Nobody was in the way.'

Receipt signature: C J Byrne, 19 June 2019.

HR FILE NOTE - FOLLOW-UP INTERVIEW

Interview date: 20 June 2019, 10:30.

Location: yard administration room, fictional depot.

Present: Gareth Venn, supervisor; Ilse Morrow, HR administrator; employee.

Employee current legal name advised: Callum James Hartigan.

Personnel surname update: registry copy received after warning was prepared.

The employee acknowledged throwing the clipboard and said it was aimed at the ground. He described the argument as a dispute over a delivery instruction and said he felt blamed for someone else's mistake. HR asked whether he understood that staff nearby could perceive the action as threatening even without an injury. He said, 'Yes, I get that, but he was yelling too.' The supervisor repeated that both staff had been told to stop.

Action items:

Employee to read communication procedure before Friday toolbox.

Supervisor to use written bay corrections on dispatch sheet.

HR to store employee response with warning.

Roster changes not required at this stage.

No medical treatment or injury report arising from the event.

No police referral made by employer for this incident.

The employee did not allege that a child was involved. The workplace was an adult delivery yard, not a junior sport setting. The thrown item was the common dispatch clipboard, not a tool or load restraint. Its plastic clip broke and it was replaced from stores stock. Damage cost was dealt with as routine stationery replacement, not a payroll deduction.

HR note on tone: employee was defensive when discussing who started the argument but listened while the warning procedure was explained. He asked how long the warning would stay on file. HR advised that records are retained and that future conduct is considered on its circumstances. No promise was made to remove the incident after a fixed period.

This note records the interview, not an independent psychological assessment. HR did not investigate conduct at home or the details of a court case. The employer had no role in any later behaviour change program. Signed: Ilse Morrow, 20 June 2019. Contact fields deliberately invalid for the synthetic fixture.

TOOLBOX ATTENDANCE AND ROUTINE PERSONNEL ACTIONS

Period covered: June-August 2019.

Employee: Callum James Hartigan, previously recorded as Byrne.

Supervisor: Gareth Venn.

Attendance sheet extract:

21 June | dispatch communication | attended | 20 minutes

28 June | pedestrian lanes | attended | 15 minutes

5 July | damaged pallet isolation | attended | 18 minutes

12 July | stock label legibility | attended | 15 minutes

19 July | vehicle reversing zones | attended | 22 minutes

26 July | heat and hydration | attended | 16 minutes

2 August | safe stacking heights | attended | 17 minutes

9 August | handover sheet completion | attended | 19 minutes

The communication session included an instruction to stop a dispute when directed by the yard supervisor. Staff were reminded to record the delivery number, identify the affected bay and avoid arguing beside moving vehicles. No private counselling service was provided by these toolbox talks. Attendance is a training record and is not recorded as a behaviour change treatment outcome.

Routine administration:

Uniform request, two shirts, approved; worn shirt returned to rag stock.

Locker key replacement, INVALID-LOCK-XX, issued after loss report.

Payroll surname amendment, registry copy sighted; no pay-rate change.

Leave request, two days in August, approved subject to delivery roster.

Emergency contact review, candidate asked to confirm details; names withheld.

Shift exchange, afternoon to morning on one Friday, supervisor approved.

Supervisor follow-up notation dated 30 August: no further yard confrontation had been reported to the supervisor during this short review period. That notation is limited to the review interval. It is not a statement about later employers or domestic relationships. The file remains a personnel record; no criminal finding is entered.

Employees sign training attendance after each talk. Signature transcriptions have been omitted from the row export to avoid repeating a synthetic signature eight times. The employee's warning acknowledgment remains on the letter page. HR retains this extract with the name-change administrative record to distinguish a surname update from a new employee file. Source document is fictional; its routine entries are included for realistic file volume rather than as separate clearance conclusions.

The extract contains the warning dated 19 June 2019, the interview note dated 20 June, the short toolbox and routine administration register, and this inventory. The warning was prepared under Byrne while the surname amendment was being processed. The subsequent note uses Hartigan. Both refer to the same employee and the same yard incident.

Inventory table:
Written warning | original date retained | receipt acknowledgment included
Employee response | quoted on warning page | no separate expanded statement
Follow-up interview | HR contemporaneous note | participants identified
Toolbox records | attendance extract | not treatment records
Surname update | administrative linkage | no new employment start
Injury report | no injury reported for this event | no medical attachment
Police report | employer made none for this event | no police attachment

The employer is not offering an opinion on whether the candidate should receive a clearance. The request was for records held about the disclosed workplace warning. We have provided the words retained in the file, including the employee's disagreement about how the event began. It would be inappropriate to replace those words with a reference written seven years later.

Routine release notes: other employees' personnel details withheld; customer names and delivery account numbers omitted; invalid identifiers used throughout. No real business, yard address, payroll account, worker contact or equipment serial number is represented. The extract is a synthetic training record styled as a personnel response.

The short follow-up notation records what the supervisor was told during its review period. It does not mean the employer can certify the candidate's complete conduct outside work. Readers should distinguish an internal warning from a conviction, and distinguish a lack of reported injury from a lack of concern about intimidation.

Signed for fictional records release: Ilse Morrow, 24 September 2026. Contact: personnel@shbs.example.invalid; 08 7000 0xxx. No attachment is missing from this four-page extract inventory. Other subjects in the screening file belong to their own issuers.
