

CONFIDENTIAL PARTICIPANT REPORT - SYNTHETIC CASE

Participant: Callum James Hartigan, born 17 August 1994.

Provider: Top End Men's Pathways, fictional service.

Facilitator: Rowan Firth; co-facilitator: Anika Pell.

Report date: 8 April 2022; copied 27 September 2026.

Cohort entry: 13 September 2021.

Program structure: twenty scheduled sessions with individual make-up arrangements.

Referral context: participant sought attendance during domestic-order period.

External criminal sentence requirement for this program: none recorded.

The final session Callum attended was 28 March 2022, and he attended 18 of 20 scheduled sessions with two make-up sessions.

The attendance table later in this report distinguishes group attendance from make-up attendance. This report retains the facilitator's session record as written. It is a separate document from the completion certificate. The facilitator has not supplied a corrected certificate with this copy release.

At intake Callum described the wall-punching incident and denied hitting his partner. He tended to compare his conduct with more severe examples and to emphasise that there was no criminal charge. The facilitators redirected discussion towards the fear that property damage can create. He engaged more consistently after the first month and was able to describe his own choices before the punch rather than only the final physical act.

Attendance alone is not a test of conduct in a future intimate relationship. The program observed Callum in structured sessions with clear facilitation. It did not conduct continuous home monitoring or independently interview his former partner. It did not investigate where her child was on the incident night. No finding about that question is made in this report.

Assessment methods: group discussion, worksheets, role-play and review of a personal interruption plan. There is no validated risk score attached. Completion records program participation, not a guarantee of future safety. The following pages describe observed participation and limitations so a reader can weigh this document alongside other sources. PARTICIPATION AND RESPONSE TO FEEDBACK

Weeks one to four: Callum attended on time and usually spoke after being asked a direct question. His early descriptions focused on provocation and distinctions between hitting a person and hitting a wall. When another participant challenged that distinction, he argued briefly and then accepted the facilitator's direction to hear the response without interruption. No threat or physical intimidation occurred in the group.

Weeks five to ten: his worksheets became more specific. He identified raising his voice, standing in a doorway and continuing a conversation after being asked to stop as potential escalation steps in hypothetical exercises. These worksheet examples are training material; the report does not assert that each was part of the March incident. He could describe several earlier opportunities to interrupt an argument rather than treating loss of temper as instantaneous.

Weeks eleven to sixteen: participation was generally constructive. He practised a time-out statement that included a return time and respected the other person's ability to decline further discussion. On one occasion he became defensive when asked how he would respond if the other person did not accept his apology. He later returned to that exercise and wrote that an apology does not create an obligation to forgive him.

Final work: his interruption plan was practical for work disputes and domestic conversations. He named leaving space, slowing his speech, putting down objects and seeking help before resuming discussion. Facilitators asked him to consider how those plans might fail if he used withdrawal as punishment. He revised the plan to include an agreed method of necessary communication.

The report records developing insight but also defensiveness when responsibility was discussed.

Both are observed features of participation. We do not infer that improvement in a group eliminates the significance of previous violent or intimidating behaviour. We also do not dismiss the specific work he completed merely because he began defensively.

Role-play notes and worksheets are held under the invalid participant identifier. They contain no independent observation of the former household. Their use here is evidence of what Callum could articulate under facilitation, with the limits of that setting.

SESSION LOG - GROUP AND MAKE-UP ATTENDANCE

Participant identifier: INVALID-TEMP-CJH.

P = present at scheduled group; A = absent; M = make-up completed.

Scheduled meetings were paused for service closure during December and January.

M2 | 28 Mar 2022 | M | catch-up for scheduled session 16

Attendance total: eighteen scheduled meetings plus two make-up meetings. No make-up is counted as an extra scheduled group attendance. Participant worksheets were reviewed in the make-up appointments; their duration and format differed from the ordinary group meetings.

Log prepared from facilitator attendance sheet, not from the certificate completion field. Late arrival records: none material to completion. Excused absence still appears as an absence in the group column. No clinical test or partner interview is represented by the attendance marks. The copy retains this chronology without explaining the separate certificate date. Initials: RF, 8 April 2022.

EXIT PLAN REVIEW

Exit discussion: 28 March 2022, individual make-up appointment.

Participant goal: interrupt escalation before loud or physical expression.

Settings considered: warehouse disagreement, family conversation, telephone dispute.

Plan entries reviewed with participant:

Recognise faster speech and repeated demands as early warnings.

Put down anything held rather than gesture with an object.

Ask for space without blocking another person's movement.

State a proposed return time and accept a different safe arrangement.

Avoid alcohol as a method of handling relationship stress.

Seek support before attempting to restart a difficult conversation.

Review whether withdrawal is being used to punish the other person.

Callum could explain those entries in his own words and apply them to role-play. In the rejected-apology exercise he initially wanted to explain his intentions again. He revised that response to allow the other person's refusal without further pressure. That revision is a positive observation from the appointment. It has not been verified through observation of a later intimate relationship.

His current circumstances at exit were more settled than at intake. He described continuing work and reduced contact with the former partner. The service did not independently verify every statement about his housing or work. There was no current partner interview available for the exit assessment. The service therefore cannot give an independent account of behaviour in a new shared household.

Callum was encouraged to seek further support if patterns returned or if a relationship transition created stress. He was provided with the service's ordinary follow-up arrangements. No further individual sessions are certified by this report. No monitoring contract is in place with a sports club, warehouse employer or screening office.

The exit plan is practical but relies on the participant choosing to use it outside facilitated meetings. The two make-up appointments demonstrate that attendance gaps were addressed, not that all future gaps in judgment have been closed. Readers should assess the specific observations without treating the report as either a risk guarantee or an automatic refusal recommendation. Facilitator: Rowan Firth. Co-facilitator review: Anika Pell. Dated 8 April 2022.

LIMITATIONS, CONSENT AND RELEASE

Participant: Callum James Hartigan.

Report issued: 8 April 2022.

Release copy supplied: 27 September 2026.

Recipient purpose: candidate's employment-screening application.

Participant authority: written request received 23 September 2026.

This report concerns participation between September 2021 and March 2022. It is not updated by the 2026 copy date. We have not conducted a fresh assessment of Callum's current circumstances for this application. The report may be useful as evidence of structured work on responsibility and interruption strategies, with the limitations described throughout.

The provider has no independent evidence resolving whether Jessica Tran's daughter was at the residence during the March 2021 incident.

Neither the former partner nor the child was interviewed for this program report. Discussion of children in group exercises was general course content. It should not be mistaken for corroboration of a specific account of that evening. The provider has not received a police clarification on that subject.

Records included: exit report and attendance log. Records separately issued: completion certificate. No amended completion certificate or note reconciling the two documents' dates accompanies this release. Requests about an administrative date should identify both the certificate and the log rather than assume that one changes the other.

The service has not made a statutory clearance recommendation. The candidate's suitability for direct junior coaching involves evidence beyond our group setting, including the work duties and other source accounts. A facilitator can explain observed participation but cannot certify that the candidate poses no risk in all settings.

Routine release inventory: five report pages supplied; cohort attendance summary included; private contact details omitted; worksheets not included; no home visit record included; no clinical diagnosis included; no actual service-provider licence number or real client identifier supplied. All named staff and the provider are fictional. Contact: facilitator@menspathways.example.invalid; telephone 08 7000 0xxx.

Signed: Rowan Firth, fictional facilitator, with Anika Pell review notation. End of report. The copy retains the original dates and statements. No third party was asked to rewrite its wording for the application.
